Whoever believes in the Saviour gains courage to bear everything and has a sure hope for the future. He does not need to lose heart over anything and may also feel himself to be under the constant, watchful protection of his God and Saviour. His heart is at peace. He has regained access to God and the certainty of eternal life; he is joyful because his sins are forgiven and his heart is at peace. And when he asks for it, he experiences real help and blessings in the most diverse ways.

On the whole, however, evil afflictions—even those most evil—do not grow less. Many temptations remain, both of an inner and outer nature. The adversary certainly has much power left. Therefore, though we have been granted a sure hope of eternal life and of God’s powerful protection, we can say we are still waiting for help. We may be certain that the Lord will not forsake us, despite misery and temptation, and (if I may say so) even when we flounder in great pain. This is a fight that must necessarily precede victory.

Johann Christoph Blumhardt, from He Sent His Word.
